

JUST THE FACTS...

Information provided by The International DYSLEXIA Association®

THE ALLIANCE FOR ACCREDITATION & CERTIFICATION OF STRUCTURED LANGUAGE EDUCATION
Sponsored by the International Dyslexia Association

Does The Alliance have individual members?

The Alliance is composed of three accrediting and/or certifying organizations. These organizations include the Academic Language Therapy Association (ALTA), the Academic Language Therapy Association Centers Council (ALTA CC), and the International Multisensory Structured Language Education Council (IMSLEC). All the efforts of these organizations are sponsored by the International Dyslexia Association (IDA).

What is The Alliance?

The Alliance is a tax qualified 501(c)(3) corporation.

The purpose of The Alliance is

To improve the teaching of reading by promoting criteria and standards for special and general education instruction

To inform the public of the criteria and standards required for quality instruction

To collaborate with researchers to validate clinically proven multisensory structured language education (MSLE) instructional practices

To collaborate with other organizations concerned with accreditation of MSLE courses and certification of graduates who work with individuals with dyslexia and related disorders.

What is the difference between accreditation and certification?

Webster's dictionary defines the following terms:

Accredit – To recognize as coming up to an official standard, worthy of trust

Accreditation – Recognition of a school, college, hospital, agency for social work or the like, as coming up to an official standard

Certify – To guarantee the quality or value of, to attest to the reliability of

Certification – The act of certifying or the state of being certified

Workshop – A seminar or meeting for the study and/or discussion of specific approaches
Workshops are for briefer periods of time (1, 2, or 3 days) than a training course and do not include a practicum and do not lead to graduation or certification.

Practicum – A supervised period of practical experience as part of an academic course

“promoting literacy through research, education and advocacy”

How do these terms apply to The Alliance?

The Alliance organizations accredit a variety of MSLE programs. Many of the programs certify the individuals who have successfully completed their requirements. Each organization maintains standards and criteria for accreditation and certification. The high standards adopted by each organization reflect the common commitment of The Alliance to improving the teaching of reading for special and general education instruction.

How can The Alliance improve teacher education in my state?

The Alliance has established standards and criteria for teacher education that are widely accepted in the field. Additionally, The Alliance has compiled a list of colleges and universities across the country that offer courses in multisensory structured language education.

Both items are available from the International Dyslexia Association.
